

VIRTUAL TRAINING COURSE FOR TEACHERS IN ETHICS

How to teach bioethics

The Centre for Medical Ethics and the Centre for Global Health at the University of Oslo is pleased to announce an open call for applicants for the “How to Teach (Bio)Ethics? - Training Course for Teachers in Ethics.”

Detailed information about the course is available HERE.

This 5-week on-line training (no participation fee required) has been designed to support and promote quality (bio)ethics education by strengthening the teaching capacities in (bio)ethics and research ethics for teachers. The training aims to address the educative methodology and pedagogical approaches behind ethics and research ethics education.

The target participant:

1. Must have an academic degree or other previous training in bioethics, medical ethics, ethics of science, research ethics or of public health ethics and global health ethics
2. Must be a teacher of bioethics, medical ethics, ethics of science, research ethics or of public health ethics and global health ethics (in universities or other educational institutions)

The number of participants will be limited, and we will use specific selection criteria. Further information about the criteria including the application process/deadlines can be found on the course webpage – see here.

Deadline for application: 11th of April 2023 (12.00 am CET (Oslo time))

Course start date: 3rd of May 2023

Please feel free to share with others involved in the topic – thank you!